Cheaper Poultry Food

On account of the scarcity and high price of feed the Poultry Industry in this country is threatened by the prospect of the wholesale slaughter of laying stock and a serious falling off in the number of pullets to be matured.

The necessity for retaining for milling every possible bushel of wheat suitable for that purpose need not be emphasized. To provide poultrymen with feed for rearing their young stock without necessarily lowering the supplies of milling wheat, the federal Department of Agriculture has requested millers to put on the market the cracked and shrunken wheat removed from the grain before it is milled.

In addition to small and broken wheat these cleanings consist chiefly of the seeds of wild buckwheat. The Poultry Division of the Central Experimental Farm has used wild buckwheat in feeding experiments and reports it to be a highly satisfactory poultry feed and has ordered two cars of buckwheat screenings for the central and branch experimental farms from the Canadian Government Elevators at Fort William. Poultry will do good grain do not take to it at first, but when they become accustomed to it they eat it readily and do well on it.

The mill cleanings from local flour mills also contain traces of many other weed seeds, including several kinds of mustard.

These, however, would not as a rule amount to more than two or three per cent. of the cleanings in the case of the standard grades of western wheat. This material is specially recommended for backyard, suburban and professional poultrymen. On farms the cleanings from yards and poultry houses where it had been fed would have to be disposed of so as not to disseminate noxious weeds in grain fields.

Those interested in obtaining this class of feed should immediately arrange with local mills or feed dealers for a supply. The mills cannot be expected to keep this material for poultry unless it is demanded for that purpose and that rests with the poultrymen themselves.

"Up-You-Go-and-the Best-of-Luck"

The hospital at X— is a comfortable place, and the men are in no hurry to leave there for the trenches, says Mr. Patrick McGill in The Great Push. But when Col. Z— pronounces them fit they must hasten to the fighting line again. And about Col. Z— "Up-you-go-and-the-best-of-luck," as he is known to the rank and file of the B. E. F., Mr. McGill tells the following interesting story:

Five men, including Gilhooley, an Indian who fought in an English regiment, when he became notorious for his mad escapades, his dare-devil pranks and his wild fearlessness, appeared before the colonel.

"How do you feel?" the colonel asked the first man.

"Not well at all," was the answer, "I can't eat 'ardly nuffink."

"That's the sort of man required up there," Col. Z— answered, "So up you go and the best of luck."

"How far can you see?" the colonel asked the next man, who had complained that his eyesight was bad.

"Only about fifty yards," was the answer.

"Your regiment is in trenches scarcely twenty-five yards from the enemy," the colonel told him. "So up you go and the best of luck."

To the third soldier, who had been wounded, he said, "Off you go and find the man who wounded you;" and to the fourth man, who confessed that he had never killed a German, he gave this advice:

"You had better double up; it's time you hit one."

It came to Gilhooley's turn.

"How many men have you killed?" the colonel asked.

"In and out, about fifty," Gilhooley answered.

"Make it a hundred then," said the colonel; "and up you go and the best of luck."

A Novel Case

The novel case of a boy being brought up from infancy as a girl has come to light at Carnarvon, Wales. Very diligent search had been made in the district for a doerster, but all efforts to trace him had failed. He was suspected of wearing woman's clothing, and amongst the crowd of holiday makers at Carnarvon a Police Sergeant noticed a young woman of masculine appearance, fashionably dressed, talking to another young woman. He straightway challenged her with being the doerster.

"My name is Dora Lewis," was the indignant reply, but the sergeant was not satisfied. He saw in the face evidence of shaving, though the hair was long and arranged like a woman's. A visit to the police station established the fact that the "young woman" was a man, though not the doerster wanted. It is reported that Lewis told the police that he was born in London, and that when three months old he was removed to his grandparents at a farm near Carnarvon. He was christened as "Dora" at the local parish church, attended school as a girl, and was treated by the attendant officers and everybody else as such. When his grandfather—who is over eighty years of age—was informed by the police of the discovery he expressed great surprise and said that there had surely been a mistake. Further inquiries are being made by the police. Meantime, the principal person concerned has discarded masculine clothing and has been reported to the military authorities.

Rationing Plan For Britain

Vast Army of Officials to Attend to Scheme With Their Reg-

Whether the people of the United Kingdom will respond to the appeal for voluntary bread and wheat flour rationing embodied in King George's recent proclamation and in posters and pamphlets issued by the ministry on food, remains to be seen, but in the meantime the ministry is working at high pressure to put the finishing touches on the machine which will be established for compulsory rationing unless the country cuts down on consumption sharply of its own volition.

The rationing of 45,000,000 people presents a tremendous and intricate problem. The ministry, however, believes that it will be largely solved in the scheme evolved. Bearing in mind Germany's rationing plan which is said to be a complete failure, Baron Drenth said that the Netherlands had to the well-nigh perfect, a rationing system developed by Herbert C. Hoover, chairman of the commission for relief in Belgium, for guidance. The different conditions prevailing in Belgium and England, of course, make it impossible to use the Belgian scheme as a whole, but the food controller has secured valuable hints

The main idea of the British plan is decentralization. The whole United Kingdom has been divided into 15 areas, each of which has been subdivided into cities, boroughs, urban district councils and rural district councils. These final small units will be charged with distributing bread and flour to the residents in their territory through bread cards or some similar plan.

A rationing committee, composed of Baron Devonport, Kennedy Jones and other prominent men, would decide what rations were to be established, what divisions there would be of the population into classes and other like questions. Another advisory committee would handle the finances and a further committee under Lord St. Davids controls the millers.

A vast army of something like 50,000 people, composed principally of officials, will assume the rationing work in addition to their regular duties, and be under the direction of Alfred Butt, who is well known on both sides of the Atlantic as a theatrical magnate. Mr. Butt has been studying the food rationing question for some months, and becomes chief director under the new scheme.

Fifteen areas would soon have a controller who would be responsible to the national rationing committee. Each major area also would have many minor controllers, who would govern the workers assigned to distributing food. It will take about two being appointed by the food controller in their duties as rationers. This would be about the middle of July, and by then it is expected that the people of the country will have given evidence as to whether they are going to comply with the voluntary rationing plan. Harvest conditions and the amount of imports available also will be a factor in determining whether the rationing scheme should be put into operation.

Alberta's Coal Resources

The Second Largest Coal Producing Province of Canada
Alberta is now the second largest

Probably 60 per cent. of the total deposits of the Dominion are to found within the boundaries of the province of Alberta, but, up to the present time, have not been touched to any appreciable extent. The reason for this is, of course, the smelter home trade, the total population of the western provinces of Canada which are supplied from the Alberta fields being less than two million. At the same time, Southern Alberta is within economic shipping distance of a pulping of over twenty million tons in the United States, south of the international boundary, a major reason for assuming fully one hundred million tons of coal annually, considerable of it being of a poor quality produced locally. Alberta, which is of high quality, practically everywhere, is the most important lignite varieties being mined. Last year nearly five million tons of coal were produced in Alberta, and it is apparent that as the years go by the mining industry will advance to the point where it will be the most important in the province. The actual amount of the coal deposits has been estimated at from 50 to 90 billion tons.

Waste Is Now a Crime

Waste—whether it consists in overfeeding of the throwing away of scraps—is a crime against the State, the community and the individual, wherever it be practised, public or private. If that conviction can be brought home to masters and mistresses, as well as to servants, can rest in full assurance that fighting men at sea and on the sea fronts will not fail in profiting the comparatively slight sacrifice required from those living in the curity of these islands.—London Daily Telegraph.

"HOLL" TOBACCO

A BRIGHT TOBACCO OF THE FINEST QUALITY 10 CENTS PER PLUG

The Squire's Sweetheart

— BY —
KATHARINE TYNAN

WARD, LOCK & CO., LIMITED
London, Melbourne, and Toronto

Hilary began to understand. The man had suffered. There was pride in the way he bore himself, pride and sensitiveness, in the poise of his head, in his eyes, on his lips, stern and yet gentle. He had had to sneek and hide because only so could he save the beloved woman who needed his help. And Lady South's old friends and neighbors had lain down, and risen up, had eaten and drunk, and talked and walked and slept, while she and her young daughter were at the mercy of their tyrant.

"We never knew how bad things were," the boy said in apology. "If we had known, the Squire or myself, or the parson or . . . or anybody, we they would have interfered."

Suddenly he put out his hand. The other man, saw it in the light of a street lamp they were passing, and took it, pressing it warmly.

"Of course you did not know," he said. "Margaret would not tell. Her shoulders still bear the marks of her father's brutality. Poor child!"

"If he were not so old!" said Hilary passionately.

"It is not for us to punish him," Mr. Langton said sternly. "Not for us and not for me."

There was a significance in his manner of saying it that made Hilary wonder.

He looked out of the window. They were in an unfamiliar part of London, a region of ugly small houses, some half-built, intersected by streets which were full of people going to and fro, lit by flaming shopfronts and the naphtha torches of the costers' barrows, a noise and a burliness that he had never seen before. Some sort of street market was evidently in progress. It was curious after crossing the lit thoroughfare carefully to plunge again into the narrow streets with hardly a sign of life in them.

"Your chauffeur must know his London well," Hilary said. "I have completely lost my bearings. And all these places seem so very much alike."

"He is used to it," Mr. Langton said.

Presently they had left the mean streets and the Change of Life and the built houses behind and they were in suburbs, running along wide roads, gardens showing in the walls, and palings and now and again a glimpse of a field. At last the motor-car stopped at a door in a high wall. They alighted, and Mr. Langton opened the door and held it for Hilary.

WOVEN OF DOUBLE AGE

Mrs. Quinn's Experience
Ought to Help You Over the Critical Period.

Lowell, Mass.—"For the last three years I have been troubled with the Change of Life and the bad feelings that attend it. I was in a very nervous condition, with headaches and pain a good deal of the time so I was unable to do my work. A friend asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I did, and it has helped me in every way. I am not nearly so nervous, no headache or pain. I must say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best remedy any sick woman can take."

Mrs. Maudie Quinn, Rear 250 Worthen St., Lowell, Mass.

Other warning symptoms are a sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headache, backache, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, spots before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness, inquietude, and dizziness.

If you need special advice, write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (Incorporated), Lynn, Mass.

any to pass through. Within was a garden and a gabled house, which had lights shining in several windows.

The chauffeur followed them in with a couple of bags, which he put down on the floor of the porch on which they were standing. Mr. Langton rang the bell. A woman in a nurse's uniform opened the door in response to the bell.

With the opening of the door there came out to meet them that smell of disinfectants and anaesthetics which is characteristic of a hospital; otherwise there was no suggestion of the purpose the house served. The hall beyond was painted in white and had white and blue washing rugs on the floor. There were pictures on the wall, a few good pieces of furniture, all very pleasant and clean-looking. "This gentleman will wait downstairs," Mr. Langton said to the nurse.

"May I smoke in the garden?" Hilary asked. He wanted to get away from the smell of disinfectants, from the clean white rooms, the woman all white, and her expressionless face in which one might look in vain for anything that gave a promise of hope, a promise of sympathy.

"Yes, do. It is a lovely night. I will send Margaret to you."

Hilary went out into the garden. It was an old garden, although the house seemed new; there was a lawn in front of the house, and beyond it a kitchen-garden, showing the low shapes of apple-trees in the moonlight. There were arches of roses over the paths; roses and honeysuckle over the porch gave out a delicious sweetness in the summer night.

At the end of the garden there was a cloud with a lurid reflection upon it—London, a pillar of smoke after a day of fire by night.

In the quietness here Hilary thought he could hear the distant noises and shouting of the London streets.

He walked up and down, having lit his cigarette. Now and again he glanced up at the lighted windows, all of which were open behind the blinds. A shadow crossed one of them—a nurse's shadow, white against a dark background.

Plainly this was a nursing home of some sort.

He had time to grow impatient and somewhat nervous before Margaret joined him. She came round to the front of the house from the back, and was beside him before he was aware of her coming.

"Well, Hilary," she said, and though there was an attempt at the old boyish cheerfulness in her voice, it was not very successful. "So you have run us to catch! I wonder you cared to see me. I was against seeing you, only Mr. Langton persuaded me."

"My poor girl!" said Hilary, with a sudden pitying tenderness. "Not care to see you? How little you know."

"You heard about mother," she said, with a gentleness and a timidity he had never known in her. "Mr. Langton has told you? You understand now that it was the only way?"

"Oh yes; I was a fool, an ass, an idiot. He did what we ought to have done. Why did you not tell me, Margaret? Do you think your friends would have permitted it?"

"It would be going on still," Margaret said, with a catch in her voice, if mother had not been so ill that I used to be afraid she would die in one of her dreadful attacks. You never saw angels pectoris, Hilary? Thank God, you never saw it! It is terrible to look at, not being able to help. And now—there is this operation as well. Is it fair? It is just that she should suffer so much? She was always so sweet and so dainty in all her ways; so innocent and harmless. Oh, she has suffered!"

She covered her face with her hands. She had been speaking in a low voice, trembling with agitation. Now she seized Hilary's arm and drew him with her down the path under a porch of roses. He saw her sister, wondering. Out of earshot of the house she turned about and indicated a lit window.

"There she lies," she said in a passionate whisper. "I left her reading her 'Initiation of Christ.' Do you know that the quiet white room where she is resting before her operation is a kind of heaven to her because she is not afraid. Because she is cared for by someone else besides her daughter, for the first time since she married my father?"

"Was it so wretched?" Hilary asked in a whisper.

"Oh, it was wretched. I don't know how I grew up amid it all. It was all about me from my babyhood. My first impression of my father was of someone who was always to be run away from. I would not run away, at any time. So he had me. I am very glad I grew up strong and healthy, to take care of my mother. Otherwise—there hasn't been much joy in it. I used to forget when I got away from it. When I went back there was always my mother trembling and my father scolding. He flogged me when I was quite little. I used to wish he would be thrown from his horse when he was out hunting, and he carried home dead."

"Oh, hush, hush, my darling!" cried poor Hilary. "I cannot endure it. I shall want to go and kill him. You poor sweet, little child!"

"You were angry with me the last time I saw you," she said simply. "It is so nice now that you are sorry for me and kind!"

Hilary put his arms about her. Making tender little sounds of compassion he smoothed the heavy silken dark hair away from her forehead.

Someone had said that Margaret South's hair had the color of a plum. The purple darkness was in strange contrast to the milky whiteness of her face and throat, with the moon shining upon them.

"Dear!" she said. "Dear!" in a quiet voice. "It is so nice that you care, Hilary."

"I am so glad you care," she said again. "Dear Hilary I was so sorry to be angry with you. It is so nice to be friends again."

"Friend! oh, much more than friends," he said, with an exultant laugh. "We are done with being enemies. We are much more than that. I don't know when it came over me that I was in love with you."

I took a long time to find out, my sweetheart, because we had known each other for so long. We were good comrades, always; but now, is not this better, Margaret?"

Before she could answer his low tones, someone whispered. "It is Mr. Langton," she said disengaging herself from his arms. "He wants me. Perhaps mother has asked for me."

They turned towards the house to meet Mr. Langton coming to meet them.

Airplane Mail Carriers

Expect Aviators Will Not Abandon Air Work When the War Is Over

It is said that the French government is planning to convert its corps of army aviators, thousands upon thousands of them, into mail carriers after the war.

There are no technical difficulties in the way. Airplane engines have been perfected to the highest degree of reliability and their speed has been developed marvelously. Nothing short of thick fog, a violent thunderstorm or a hurricane bordering almost on a tornado now serves to prevent flying—rarely a casualty from natural causes.

Indeed, the greatest defect in the army aerial service, according to officials in that branch, is overconfidence in what the airplane engine can do. Flights of six and eight and ten hours without replenishing the gasoline supply are now of common occurrence. Mountains can be scaled as if they were mounds under the foot of a Bouldingagian. Aviators leave the British side of the Channel and shoot passages over the messengers on the war front with no more sense of the unusual than if they had taken a steamer from Dover to Boulogne.

The possibilities of mail carrying in this little region have not been thoroughly investigated, because only the demands for war efficiency have brought flying to the point of desirability for general service.

The French government did establish some post routes for airmen, but nothing on an extensive scale was adopted. Commercially, the utility of the airplane after the war will be open to the fullest exploitation. Britain will have scores of thousands of expert aviators and not many of these will abandon the "sport" which now is serving the British armies so splendidly.

Friends Worth Retaining

The Great Mistake of Making War On Birds

Birds are the friends of mankind. Were it not for their kindly offices, so fitly required, men could not live upon the earth more than a year or two. Insect life would sweep over the earth in a devastating flood; every green thing would disappear, as insects great and small, flying, creeping, swimming, boring and omnivorous, swept over the land. The birds, and the birds alone, are our guardians and keepers and yet we make senseless war upon them. Because a few birds that guard our peas and cherries take tribute of the fruit they preserve, we make senseless war upon them until by sad experience we are taught that it is a choice between plenty of birds and fewer cherries, and without the birds no cherries at all. The hawks and owls rid us of poisonous vermin, and now they take a chicken for tribute, therefore we make war upon hawks and owls, and by and by we have no clover, because the mice have eaten of the humblebees and so the clover is not fertilized. Women—horrible thought!—that they may wear feathers in their hats, doom millions of beautiful and useful birds to extinction, and then, as in Italy, a murrain sweeps the land—Christian Register.

"Do your constituents endorse your attitude?" "I don't know yet," replied Senator Sorghum. "Attitudes are not as easy as they used to be. I can remember the time when all I needed in the way of an attitude was an Ajax-defying lightning pose while I mentioned George Washington and the American eagle."

"I've often wondered why my wife accepted me," said a man.

"Didn't you tell me once that she had simple tastes?"

PAIN? NOT A BIT!

LIFT YOUR CORNS OR CALLUSES OFF

No humbug! Apply few drops then just lift them away with fingers.

This new drug is an ether compound discovered by a Cincinnati chemist. It is called freezone, and can now be obtained in tiny bottles as here shown at very little cost from any drug store. Just ask for freezone. Apply a drop or two directly upon a tender corn or callus and instantly the soreness disappears. Shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it off, root and all, with the fingers.

Not a twinge of pain, soreness or irritation; not even the slightest smarting, either when applying freezone or afterwards.

This drug doesn't eat up the corn or callus, but shrivels them so they loosen and come right off. It is no humbug! It works like a charm. For a few cents you can get rid of every hard corn, soft corn or corn between the toes, as well as painful calluses on bottom of your feet. It never disappoints and never burns, lacerates or inflames. If your druggist hasn't any freezone, tell him to get a little bottle for you from his wholesale house.

Lava Takes Years to Cool

Has Been Known to Retain Heat for a Period of Over Forty Years

Peasants on the slopes of Mount Etna can still boil water over the lava that flowed from the volcano during the eruption of 1910. Lava, according to Walter Woodburn Hyde of the University of Pennsylvania, writing to the Geographical Review, often reaches a temperature of 2,000 degrees F.

Even the ancient poets recorded the tenacity with which lava retains the heat, and Borelli, describing the great eruption of 1669, says the lava took eight years to cool. It is related that steam was still rising in 1830 from lava ejected in 1747. And this is not astonishing when we remember that the stream of molten lava which reached the sea at Catania on that occasion was at least 600 yards in breadth, 45 feet deep and contained 3,532,000,000 cubic feet. It banked up against the walls of Catania, which were 60 feet high until it flowed over the top and destroyed a large part of the city. The huge promontory that acts like a break-water to the harbor is the remains of that stream of lava that flowed into the sea.

Danger in the Well

Of all the different wells to be feared the dug well is probably the most dangerous. It is usually walled up with loose stones, leaving only cracks and crevices. In these openings many small animals such as crows, lizards, snakes and mice enter their homes. These animals frequently die, drop into the water and decay, thus making the water extremely unpleasant as well as unsafe for use. Aside from this point the dug well is open to another criticism. It is usually on a level with the surrounding area and during heavy rains is quite apt to receive the drainage and wash from surrounding lawns and pens as well as from privies.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Catarrh being generally induced by constitutional conditions requires constitutional treatment. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People act directly and effectively through the blood on the mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, giving the patient strength by building up the constitution, assisting nature in doing its work. The prospect of a cure is so great that the powers of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are so great that they can cure Catarrh. Send for list of testimonials. Address, Dr. J. C. "Three Days in a Submarine"

A provincial church, at which the congregation has been growing less and less every Sunday for some time, was recently crowded long before the time for commencement of the service. The minister was evidently adopting the government's idea that sermons should be more practical and topical in these days, for the subject announced, which had attracted such wonderful numbers was "Three Days in a Submarine." The expectant congregation were treated to a wonderful discourse, but came away sadder and wiser not after hearing a sermon on Jonah.—London Daily Express.

Miller's Worm Powders are a pleasant medicine for worm-infested children and they will take it without objection. When directions are followed it will not injure the most delicate child, as there is nothing of an injurious nature in its composition. They will speedily rid a child of worms and restore the health of the little sufferers whose vitality has been impaired by the attacks of these internal pests.

Abstinence Is Good Medicine

Ninety per cent. of the English well-to-do classes habitually overeat. If their daily rations were cut down to a third of the food regularly consumed during the war there would be less disease, better work, and far clearer thinking. Six months of a restricted diet would be a great boon to the nation's brain power and effectiveness. The increase in health and happiness would be so great that there would be no general tendency to gorge again when peace returns. The Kaiser has already forced his Prussian to be efficient. He may yet succeed in compelling her to be abstemious and healthy.—London Daily Express.

Recognized as the leading specific for the destruction of worms, Mother Graves' Worm Extirminator has proved a boon to suffering children everywhere. It seldom fails.

"You must enjoy hearing your prima donna sing."

Angels Admiring Zeppelin

German Humorist Gives Dead Count a Front Window in Heaven

The Bavarian humorous paper Simplicissimus features on its front page a picture of "Count Zeppelin in Heaven." The count has flown up to heaven in one of his own cruisers, which is seen resting on a cloud bank in the background, undergoing the inspection of a crowd of admiring angels. Count Zeppelin, attended by a committee of cherubs, is being welcomed by St. Peter, who makes him a laudatory address, informing him that he has been given one of the finest locations. A feature of the new residence, remarks St. Peter, is that "you can see Germany from the front window."

Pills for Nervous Trouble.—"The stomach is the centre of the nervous system, and when the stomach suspends healthy action the result is manifest in disturbances of the nerves. If allowed to persist, nervous debility, a dangerous ailment, may ensue. The first consideration is to restore the stomach to proper action, and there is no readier remedy for this than Farnell's Vegetable Pills. Thousands can attest the virtue of these pills in curing nervous disorders."

Value of Good Roads to the Farmer

Poor roads are very expensive things for country communities. The farmer who thinks that improved highways are mainly for the benefit of those who drive automobiles should reflect on the results of a recent investigation by the department of Agriculture, which shows that the cost of hauling farm produce over ordinary country roads is twenty-three cents a ton mile whereas over hard-surfaced roads it is only thirteen cents.—Youth's Companion.

Can Practice Economy

A shrinkage of 3,000,000 tons in the garbage collections in a month shows that even the extravagant city of New York can practice economy when it sets out to do so. And as it may be assumed that every ton of decrease in the volume of garbage means an additional ton of utilized food, the metropolitan report indicates the tremendous importance of this one item in food conservation.—Providence Journal.
